

The Skills Race:

How well is the world

preparing workers

for the jobs of tomorrow?

How well is your country doing to prepare workers for the jobs of tomorrow? Do graduates have the skills and talent the private sector is looking for? You may be surprised, based on the results of the GE Global Innovation Barometer.

Globally more than half of business executives and citizens believe their own education system is doing a good job teaching the skills that companies want, but responses are all over the map—literally—when it comes down to how each country's education system is graded.

Here's how the views of business executives and citizens diverge in many countries, and how that matches up with the rankings by experts at the World Economic Forum:

